"The Integration Team is component of the evolution and testing of participatory approaches for the Sierra Nevada Adaptive Management Program. Responding to stakeholder and agency input, the purpose of the Integration Team is to engage the public, the University of California, and natural resource agencies in a process of mutual learning as we proceed through the adaptive management cycle. Part of the work is to learn about University of California research and data, as well as Forest Service treatments, so that the Integration Team can evaluate and understand the tradeoffs as research information is integrated within the adaptive management project and into Forest Service management. Ultimately, the goal is to address the part of the adaptive management cycle where scientific information and public input is integrated into future management decisions."
